I'm pleased to welcome Ramblers back to the Hudson River Valley this September. The region is one of New York State's gems and home to some of the most significant historic and cultural sites in the Country. The Annual Hudson River Valley Ramble provides New Yorkers and visitors from outside our state with an excellent assortment of activities to help them 'Get Offline, Get Outside,' and explore as we continue to celebrate 250 years of history in our state. Known for its natural beauty, contributions to culture, and significant role it played during the Revolutionary War, the Hudson River Valley helped shape the American identity — which is why it was designated as a National Heritage Area in 1996.

Today, the Maurice D. Hinchey Hudson River Valley National Heritage Area has over 100 historic sites, including places that tell the story of America's path to victory. These sites include West Point, the nation's oldest continuously occupied military post, where the Continental Army stopped British ships from sailing further upriver; Stony Point Battlefield State Historic Site, where General George Washington staged a nighttime assault that allowed him to gain control of a British fort in less than a half hour; and Mount Gulian Historic Site, headquarters of Major General Friedrich von Steuben, drill master of the Continental Army.

In addition to these sites, the National Heritage Area highlights the many streams and waterfalls that powered early sawmills and gristmills, landscapes that inspired the Hudson River School painters, and commercial leaders who built their great estates along the river. We're excited to welcome you to explore the region this September!

The Hudson River Estuary

For nearly half its 315-mile length, the Hudson River is an estuary, where fresh water from the river's Adirondack headwaters and numerous tributaries mixes with salty ocean water.

From the dam at Troy, the Hudson River estuary ebbs and flows for 153 miles to New York Harbor, creating a rich ecosystem pulsing with life. Its waters and tidal marshes provide habitat for more than 200 species of fish, and nursery areas for key commercial and recreational species including striped bass, American shad, bluefish, and blue crab. Bald eagles, osprey, herons, and waterfowl feed on the Hudson's bounty while nesting and migrating. Protected by surrounding forest lands, the streams of the estuary's watershed supply drinking water to millions.

The Hudson River Estuary Management Program leads a regional effort to improve water quality, protect and restore fish, wildlife, and their habitats; provide river access; help communities adapt to climate change; and conserve open space and world-famous scenic views. The program is guided by the Estuary Action Agenda, a conservation and restoration blueprint developed by diverse communities up and down the river. Implementation of the Action Agenda relies on partnerships with federal and state agencies, local governments, and regional organizations.

National Estuaries Week

September 19-26

Each year in late September, people across the country celebrate estuaries. These magical places are used as spawning grounds and nurseries by at least two-thirds of the nation's commercial fish and shellfish species and provide habitat for migratory birds. Plus, their tidal wetlands protect uplands from coastal flooding.

Explore State Parks & Historic Sites

The state park system is one of New York's greatest treasures, encompassing more than 250 diverse parks, historic sites, trails, golf courses, and boat launches. With 360,000 acres of protected land and water, they are the perfect backdrop for all our communities to connect, explore, and make memories with family and friends.

The New York State Office of Parks, Recreation and Historic Preservation's Ramble Events showcase flagship properties, hidden gems, and new ways to discover the Hudson Valley including guided hikes, walks, nature education, and outdoor adventures.

KATHY MOSER

The Hudson River Valley is home to some of New York State's most significant natural, historic, and cultural resources. As New York joins the nation in commemorating the 250th anniversary of the American Revolution, our state parks and historic sites provide meaningful opportunities to explore the landscapes and places that played a vital role in our nation's founding. From Revolutionary War battlefields and historic homes to scenic trails and waterways, there are countless ways to explore this iconic region. I encourage everyone to take advantage of these experiences and discover the history, beauty, and recreational opportunities that make the Hudson River Valley a destination to enjoy in every season.
